The many divorces which take place in the United States show that there is a sad want of forethought and reflection on the part of hundreds who unite themselves for better or for worse. There are, doubtless, n most of such cases, faults on both sides, and the man or woman who expects to redize the dreams of youth, and who cannot practice the virtue of forbarance, sadly mistake poor human nature. While however, we would depreciate hasty or prema-ure marriages, we believe that in such nallowed contracts, delays are dangerous, especially if they be protracted beyond easonable limits. And yet in our humole judgment, it is never to late to marry, inless the facilities be exhausted, the frame be enfeeble, and age be present with all its nfirmities. Dull times exercise a sad influence upon natrimonial affairs. We fear, too, that exravagance of dress and fashion, to which oo many of the fair sex of this country inlulge, deferes hundreda of active and enerprising young men from encountering ill the risks and responsibilities involved n the selection of a partner for life. Far etter to begin moderately and econmicaly, to save something from year to year, han reckless spirit, with a chance of an early fall. Mutual forbarance is absolutely essential in the marriage state.
